Abstract

A method of creating a database from input data is disclosed. The input data is acquired from another existing database or generated from the acquired data records from the another database. In particular, some of the input data is the original data from which the another database was created from. The input data in the input file is automatically filled into the fields in a sequence of input screens to generate the database.